

COMMON SENSE

VOL. 1, NO. 1

PRINTED IN THE USA

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2026

Protect Girls Sports

Common sense is not merely a slogan; it is the faculty by which we perceive the plain truths of our existence. In the realm of athletics, a plain truth is currently under siege...

BY MARK GREENSTEIN | OPINION

Common sense is not merely a slogan; it is the faculty by which we perceive the plain truths of our existence. In the realm of athletics, a plain truth is currently under siege: that biological differences between the sexes matter, and that fairness requires we acknowledge them.

It has been over fifty years since Title IX was enacted. Its purpose was explicit and noble—to ensure that young women had the same opportunities as young men to compete, to strive, and to achieve glory on the playing field. It was a recognition that without distinct categories, female athletes would be effectively erased from the podium. Today, we face a peculiar regress where the very category of 'girls' sports' is being dismantled in the name of a new, abstract definition of inclusion.

We are told that to exclude biological males who identify as females from girls' sports is a form of bigotry. But let us apply the lamp of experience. Sports are discriminative by nature. We discriminate by age—we do not force 12-year-olds to wrestle 18-year-olds. We discriminate by weight in boxing and wrestling—we do not pit the featherweight against the heavyweight. We do this not out of malice, but out of a fierce commitment to fairness. Sex is the most fundamental of these biological categories.

When a biological male competes in female athletics, the competitive balance is shattered. The bone density, muscle mass, and lung capacity conferred by male puberty provide an insurmountable advantage that no amount of training or 'identification' can erase. To ignore this is to tell every girl on the starting line that her effort, her discipline, and her dreams are secondary to the validation of another's personal identity.

The Patriot Way: Rebuilding Excellence

BY SPORTS DESK | SPORTS

Actions speak louder than words. As Drake Maye takes the helm in New England, we look at the historical precedent for quiet leadership.

The Town Hall: Democracy's Purest Form

BY SARAH MILLER | CIVICS

In an age of digital noise, the Vermont town hall meeting remains a beacon of civil discourse. Neighbors facing neighbors, debating the budget...

Axe the Tax: A Legacy of Minimalist Government

BY HISTORICAL ARCHIVE | HISTORY

Gov. Meldrim Thomson didn't just have a catchy slogan; he had a philosophy. We revisit the 'Axe the Tax' platform and why New Hampshire's advantage depends on it.

Restoring Civics in the Classroom

BY EDUCATION BOARD | EDUCATION

American history scores are at an all-time low. The solution isn't more technology; it's a return to the foundational texts.

Social Security - Rep. Larson defends the indefensible

BY MARK STEWART | LIBERTY & POLITICS

Oh my. Congressman John Larson has made “saving Social Security” his banner issue. Only a few highly protective or deeply out-of-touch people think this is a system worth saving...

LOCAL WRITERS

Common Sense 250 is looking for passionate voices in New England to cover local civics.
Inquire within.

YOUR AD
HERE

Reach thousands of engaged citizens across
New England.
Starting at $35/issue.